The article by Mr. Moffett, on which the suits were based, said in part:

Step by step the investigation led back from the retailer to the wholesaler, to the manufacturer. And there, to his unbounded surprise, Cassidy ran straight into the Standard Oil Company, which formidable concern, as now came to light, had at some time before quietly bought up glucose factories all over the country, until it had added this important industry to its list of monopolies. So here was the situation: All the glucose that came into Philadelphia was manufactured by the Standard Oil Company, and this glucose was tainted with sulphities!

Before noting what Cassidy did in this emergency, let us consider what reasons could make this greatest trust in the world descend to the petry deceit of poisoning candy. We have seen them plundering men, but the little children—How was that possible? It was possible because it paid. There is the answer. Anything that There is the answer. We pointed out that the Corn Products Corporation, which manufactures glucose and glucose products, has on its board of directors several of the prominent directors of the Standard Oil Company, that Philadelphian newspapers, in dealing with these glucose cases, had repeatedly referred to Standard Oil as being the power back of the glucose industry; that Philadelphians refer to the matter as a Standard Oil affair.

Evidently the Standard Oil Company representatives were not satisfied with our attitude and determined to bring a suit.
